Trends to Watch

Warmer weather combined with cabin fever and quarantine fatigue all point towards a continued focus on outdoor dining. Customers are eager to get out more in the spring and summer, and this year is no exception. From sturdy outdoor seating to cold, refreshing beverages, be ready to welcome patrons looking for safe ways to relax, beat the heat, and create memories.

Many operators are currently working with pared down menus, but that doesn't mean a lack of creativity or variety. Versatile countertop equipment is the perfect way to both test out new menu items and to offer rotating specials. Even if it's not time to expand back to a full menu, having unique and interesting specials is a surefire way to stand out from competition and to bring in new customers.

Maintaining Your Electric Fogger

After use, wipe off any residual solution using a soft clean cloth. Rinse the solution tank with clean water and pour out. Refill the solution tank with clean water and run the machine for about 30 seconds to flush any remaining solution. Doing so will avoid nozzle blockage and/or corrosion.

Store machine in a well ventilated, dry environment away from direct sunlight and out of the reach of children.

Exterior parts can be cleaned using a soft cloth with mild detergents or soapy water.

Dining

& THE GREAT OUTDOORS

WHILE THE GROWTH OF OUTDOOR DINING MAY HAVE BEEN fueled by unforeseen circumstances, many customers are eager to embrace eating al fresco more often. They can continue enjoying and supporting their favorite restaurants without the unease of being inside enclosed spaces. Plus, there is ample scientific research that shows being outdoors is good for our health! It can also boost your mood and creativity—and who doesn't need a little boost now and then?

For operators, successful outdoor dining spaces don't have to involve major renovations. Many times, showing simple and thoughtful attention to detail can be all it takes to keep guests coming back.

All Things Tabletop

If your regular serving dishes are too fragile (and too valuable) to be taken outside, there are countless modern melamine dinnerware and serving options. Available in interesting textures, colors, and patterns that rival even the finest china, you're sure to find just the right pieces to match your decor. Adding reusable dome plate covers will help ensure food arrives to guests clean and protected, especially if it's a long walk from the kitchen to where diners are seated.

Drinkware is another important consideration. You can still maintain the aesthetics of your brand while switching to durable plastic cups, and customers will be able to relax without feeling like they have to be careful around fragile glass. Unless theft is a concern, your usual stainless steel flatware should be fine to use outdoors. You have options there too though, like eco-friendly disposables or lightweight, more easily-replaceable steel sets that can be reused or recycled. Just make sure whichever type you choose is packaged and stored in a way that is both sanitary and easily portable.

Embrace eating al fresco

Take a Seat + Creature Comforts

When selecting furniture for your outdoor dining area, the ideal choice is high-quality furniture that is designed to be used outside. Easy to clean and built to withstand the elements, commercial outdoor furniture is an investment that pays for itself. Just like with modern plastic tableware, modern plastic furniture can look and feel just as nice as anything made with traditional materials. Since moving your operation outside means you now have additional concerns like pollen buildup, mildew, and the elements to contend with, it's important to make sure whatever furniture you use is safe, sturdy, and simple to maintain.

Speaking of the elements, patio heaters and portable air cooling units or fans can be the difference between a good guest experience and an uncomfortable meal. Even a simple umbrella can offer just enough protection to make diners more comfortable on bright, sunny days.

These helpful tips brought to you by our buying group partner. See back cover for details.

Hygiene + Food Safety

Adding a mobile handwashing station to your outdoor setup is arguably the smartest move of all. Guests will appreciate the convenience factor, and busy servers walking back and forth, as well as any customers dining indoors, will appreciate the reduced foot traffic in and out of your restaurant. Insulated holding bags and equipment can also be a valuable addition to your outdoor dining transition. Depending on how far servers have to walk to deliver food and drinks, you may be able to find creative solutions to ensure guests receive what they ordered at proper temperatures, and with minimal exposure.

Alternate Outdoor Setups

Many restaurants are also moving more than just their dining room outside. You can create a curbside to-go and/or third-party delivery holding station. Most holding equipment meant for catering is also portable, providing the perfect place for orders that are ready to be picked up. Indoors or out, the addition of a staging and holding area for pickup orders is also a smart way to keep on-site dining areas separate and clutter-free.

COVID-19-Induced

EQUIPMENT CHANGES
FOR THE FUTURE

The novel coronavirus has caused an onslaught of changes in the foodservice industry – many negative, of course, but also some positive ones that might just bring a silver lining to shine a light on future growth opportunities.

n

The adoption of modern technologies for kitchen operations, ordering and off-premises dining, for example, have sped up dramatically in response to COVID-19-influenced dining room closures. Even prior to the pandemic, foodservice designers were specifying more flexible spaces so operators could do more with less space and enhance efficiencies across their operations. Currently, that need is greater than anyone could have imagined.

“ Some of these changes were already happening before COVID-19; now, it’s all about applying new methods to old problems,” says Richard (Dick) Eisenbarth, FCSI, president, emeritus, Cini-Little International Inc. “In many cases, it’s more about the reallocation of space rather than a full rebuild. ”

Here, Eisenbarth offers five specific thoughts on what has and will continue to change operationally in kitchens, and how this will impact design and equipment specification. This is an elaboration of some points he first made during a virtual session in October as part of the Foodservice Equipment and Design Lunch & Learn series.

Make physical space for “hospitality ambassadors” to assist with guest interaction and takeout orders.

Reengineer commercial kitchen design for flexibility, high-volume, low-cost production.

Take advantage of space by building kitchens vertically, or “ghostly.”
